Overview 3D2N

Pekanbaru is the capital of Riau Province and has rapidly developed into a multi-ethnic trading city. The largest ethnic group in Pekanbaru is the Minangkabau tribe, making up about 40.96% of the total population, followed by the indigenous Malay ethnic group of Riau, as well as Javanese, Batak, and Chinese ethnicities.

Pekanbaru was originally a small settlement on the banks of the Siak River, and it grew in importance as a trading center during the Dutch colonial period. The city has since developed into a major urban center and a hub for trade, industry, and education in the region.

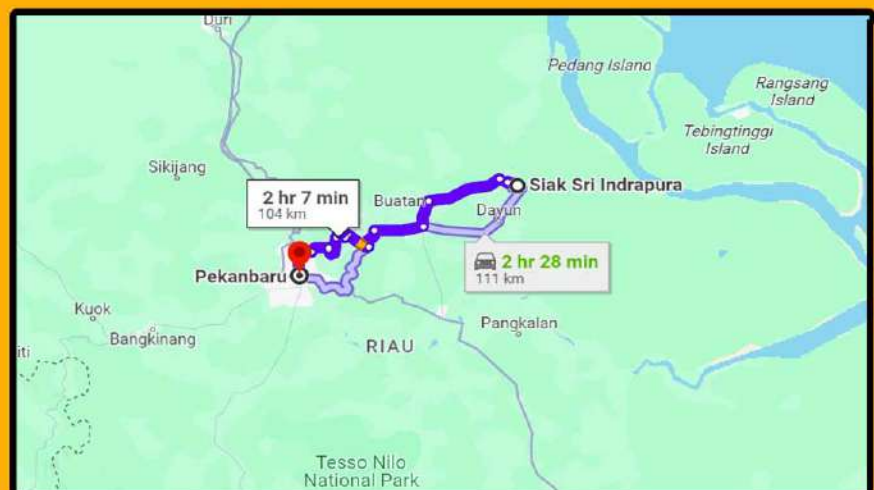

Pekanbaru was originally known as "Senapelan" which was led by a tribal chief called Batin. This area continued to develop into a new settlement and over time became Dusun Payung Sekaki located at the mouth of the Siak River.

Masjid Raya An Nur in the Riau Province is a grand mosque constructed in 1968. It boasts of ten domes and four minarets, along with ample space to accommodate up to 4,500 worshippers. The mosque is well-maintained and provides a comfortable environment for prayers. It has a vast parking area, outdoor spaces for recreation and sports, as well as an expansive prayer area on its second floor that is surrounded by shady trees.

Sang Nila Utama Museum, also known as Museum Negeri Riau, is an establishment that exhibits clothing, handicrafts, and models of historical structures from Indonesia's Riau region. This heritage museum showcases artifacts representing the Riau-Malay heritage, such as traditional Malay wedding attire and musical instruments. Adjacent to the museum lies the Riau Cultural Park where cultural performances and art events take place
